The East India Company. The New York Courier and Enquirer gives the following remarkable instance of tyrainy and oppressien on the part of the East India Company of England which we deem of sufficient interest to extract : An expotentate of India - one who had a right to sovereignty there, to which the company that has dared to dethrone him can never with justice claimhas been provoked by the severity of his wrongs to bring his case before the British public through the medium of the press. The Prince of Coorg has published a letter in the Daily News, in which he exposes a proceeding so despotic and heartless on the part of the East India Company, that one's only wonder is how any people making the slightest pretensions to liberty and humanity can tolerate such conduct among

The unfortunate Rajah, like too many of his class, fell prostrate before the resistless and remorseless encroachments of British dominion in Hindostan-do minion, however, not excercised by the English Crown, but only by an English company. Making a virtue of necessity, he placed himself in the company's hands. They took from him his kingdom, they appropriated his possessions, they stripped him of his honors. Nay, they robbed him of that which, next to life itself, is so dear to every man-they deprived him of his liberty. They made him their prisoner in spite of all he surrendered, and retained him in captivity for fourteen years. At length, under a sense of shame, let us charitably suppose, at their monstrous injustice and cruelty, they release their princely captive, and as a miserable apology for compensation for the injury done, they give him a pension. By and by he is permitted to visit England; and taking advantage of the opportunity to enforce some pecuniary claims he legally had upon the company, they revenge themselves by stopping this paltry pension, and leaving him destitute. Such, according to the accounts, is the substance of his hard case. And it is but one, there is too much reason to believe, of many such which have from time to time occurred.

Greek Church.

Such as it was, the Greek church flourished during centuries when the Sclavonians and Russians were immersed in paganism. It was about the end of the ninth century that the Sclavonians, Arentani, and the laborers have been withdrawn to fill up the ranks to Constantinople, to declare their resolution of submitting to the Emperor, and embracing, at the same time, the Christian religion; which caused great rejoicing, and missionaries were dispatched to convert the people. A bishop was also sent; and thus such was the beginning and first dawn of Christianity among the rude and warlike Russians who inhabited the Ukraine, and then, as now, threatened the peace ments have nothing to gain, and may lose themselves and independence of the Grecian Empire. Poland of Russia and Muscovy, who had, six years before, married Anne, the sister of the Grecian Emperor, Basilius the Second, was persuaded by her to be baptized, and his subjects followed the example of their Prince; and this is the true date of the establishment of Christianity among that people, who have sainted Wlodimir and his duchess, and continue to worship them, particularly at Kiova, where they are interred. From this date to 1589, the Russian-Greek Christian church and people remained under the jurisdiction of the Patriarch of Constantinople, when Jeremiah, the ruling authority in a competition for the office against another candidate, Metrophanes, (for it was usually carried by intrigue and bribery,) in order to obtain the assistance and pecuniary succors of his Russian brethren, conceded the independence of the Patriarchate of Moscovy to Job, the Bishop of Rostow: still reserving a sort of paramount right to an initiatory suffrage, and a tribute of five hundred gold ducats. Very shortly after, these obligations were annulled.

Here, then, was the first emancipation of the Russian from the superiority of the Turkish head, tionary movements on the continent.
